145 YEARS OF RAIL

The lines from Terowie to Pichi Richi and from Jamestown to Section 216 (dubbed as Yongala Junction) were surveyed in December 1878 by Mr McCormick, the resident engineer of the Port Pirie and Jamestown Line.

By May 1879 tenders had been called for work on the line from Jamestown to Yongala Junction (named Petersburg in 1880) with construction of the Jamestown line beginning in December 1879. This line was ready for traffic in December 1880. Work began on the narrow line from Terowie in February 1880.

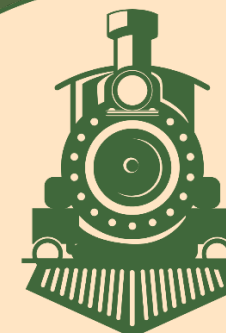

The Opening of the Terowie and Jamestown extensions to Petersburg was held on Tuesday 14th December 1880 although the line from Terowie had not been completed. The official government party travelled from Terowie by road and the line was opened by the Governor of SA Sir WFD Jervois.

The Terowie line was completed early in 1881. Due to the unavailability of water, the line was not operational until 11th May and was opened by the Treasurer the Hon WB Rounsevell.

The narrow-gauge line from Terowie was the cause of much aggravation to the townsfolk of Petersburg/Peterborough who lobbied tirelessly for many years to have the break of gauge changed to the town with the continuation of broad-gauge from Terowie to Peterborough.

The narrow-gauge line from Port Augusta to Farina and Quorn to Petersburg was declared open on Wednesday 17th May 1882.

The standard-gauge line to Silverton began construction in 1885 with the line from Petersburg to Cockburn, built by the SA Government, opened in April 1887. The line from Cockburn to the NSW border was completed in November and the line to Broken Hill was officially opened on Thursday 12th January 1888. This finally connected Broken Hill and Silverton with Port Adelaide and Port Pirie by rail.
